Winter Course

January 4, 2021 – January 18, 2021

Migration in the margins of Europe for Master & PhD students in

Social sciences (ONLY DUTCH/GREEK UNIV.)

DEADLINE 11 DECEMBER

The Institute of Migration and Ethnic Studies of the University of Amsterdam, the department of Social and Cultural Anthropology of the VU University of Amsterdam and the Netherlands Institute in Athens, organize this intensive winter course for the tenth consecutive year in collaboration with Panteion University. As the course will be taking place during the pandemic, the number of students we will be accepting is only 8, so we encourage early registration. The winter school is being offered only to students who enrol in Greek or Dutch Universities as the current circumstances pose a number of limitations. The course will be online from the 4th to the 9th of January and from the 10th to the 18th of January on location in Athens.

About the course

The collapse of the eastern Block at the beginning of the 1990s and the larger socioeconomic transformations in Africa and Asia resulted in massive migration flows to Greece and Europe in general. Undoubtedly the East Mediterranean became one of the entry “gates” of Europe as its geographical position is at the margins, at the crossroads of Asia and Africa in the south of the Mediterranean Sea, and includes the large Aegean basin with thousands of islets and islands that serve as mobility networks.

Within a few decades the social life in the wider region transformed with a large proportion of the population being immigrants who are living in the countryside or in various neighbourhoods of the capital city of Athens. In these contexts, migrants are trying tactically to make their lives despite the high unemployment rate, the stigmatization and the marginalization they encounter. Therefore, a major part of our seminar will focus on how immigrants experience such new conditions and how they adapt or adopt in the new cultural contexts.

More recently the flows of refugees have been intensified as a result of the wider political changes in the middle East, Asia and Africa while Europe is facing one of the most challenging periods of its contemporary history. As the idea of fortress Europe is becoming reinforced, “the entry points” in Greece have to share disproportionately with all other Europeans the management and social policy of the new flows.

The course will be supplemented with a small field research in the centre of Athens and students will try to contribute to our migration project by recording and illustrating life experiences of refugees and other immigrants by taking into consideration all COVID-19 related measurements.

Structure of the course

Please keep in mind that in the current circumstances there might be alterations of the program or even in the worst case a cancelation of the winter school depending on Greek national guidelines and regulations. Please be aware that a cancelation of your participation and a return of the seminar fee is possible at all times before arrival. From the 4th of JAN to the 9th JAN 2021 the course will be online and from the 10th until the 18th of JAN 2021 will take place in Athens for 8 days.

if Covid-19 circumstances allow us the seminars will run daily at the NIA in Athens and in outside spaces. The courses will combine field research in specific neighbourhoods of Athens and in selected NGO's. The seminar will focus on a general theoretical context in relation to migration, anthropological theory, contemporary approaches to field research in an urban setting and an overview of the current situation in Greece. In the sessions the lecturers give an overview of the theory of social anthropology/social sciences in relation to migration with particular reference to key debates and a clear focus on migration in Greece and Europe/Mediterranean. In the late afternoon/evenings students will be able to conduct their small field research. In preparation to the seminar, students are expected to have read the literature before the beginning of the course as there will be an online preparatory session approximately a week before arrival.

Aim

The aim of the seminar is to give students an overview of current debates and research topics in relation to refugees and migration, illustrate the current issues in Greece in a comparative manner and give some directions in relation to fieldwork in Greece or other European and Mediterranean areas. By participating in a small field research, the students gain some practical experience in the new context, use their skills, make new contacts and learn how to place their findings within wider local and global processes.

COVID 19 Measures

Based on the instructions of EODY (Greek Organization for Public Health) and the relevant circulars on the measures against COVID-19, we would like to inform you about the following:

- You will be obliged to fill out a passenger locator form at least 48 hours before flying to Greece (<https://travel.gov.gr/#/>)
- Most likely you will need an authorised Covid-19 negative test 72 hours before arrival in Greece
- Keep in mind that measures are continuously changing so be informed on the latest news by EODY (Greek Organization for Public Health) (<https://eody.gov.gr/en/covid-19/>)
- According to current measures masks are obligatory at all times both during seminars in enclosed spaces as well as outside.
- There might be a case that some seminars could be followed by a small number of students through the internal video projection system of the institute in a second seminar room
- All accommodation will be single-rooms/flats
- You will be strongly advised to arrive at least 2 days in advance and stay in self-containment if you are coming from abroad.
- You should know that if you develop any flu like symptoms before arrival in Greece you should not travel
- It is expected that if you develop any flu like symptoms in Athens you should immediately self-quarantine and inform the staff of NIA

Course requirements, language and credit

The course is available to MA and first year PhD students with a relevant background (e.g. in anthropology, sociology, migration studies, political science). All lectures will be given in English. The course will be concluded with a paper of (3000 words) for those who would like to apply at their departments for 5 ECTS points. Students at UvA may choose this course in the MA programs of the Graduate School of Social Sciences at the Faculty of Social Sciences. For eligibility, please contact your MA coordinator.

Results

At the end of the seminar (18th of January), students give a presentation in relation to their research and observations with a short analysis of their findings. These presentations will be commented by the lecturers on style and logic as well as on the conceptual content. Finally, the seminar will be evaluated by students, lecturers and staff of the NIA in a general discussion.

Participation – application

Only Master and early M.Phil/PhD students from the Social Sciences can participate in the seminar. Students can apply until 11 December 2020 by using the application form from the NIA website (www.nia.gr). The successful applicants will be notified by the 15th of December. The number of participating students is limited (max. 8 students), so we encourage early registration. Selecting criteria will apply. As it was already mentioned please keep in mind that in the current circumstances there might be alterations of the program or even in the worst case a cancelation of the winter school depending on Greek national guidelines and regulations. Please be aware that a cancelation of your participation and a return of the seminar fee is possible at all times before arrival.
